Micro Lore – Guidelines

- The following is short-form lore and flavour text for the world of Cheeze Wizards.

- Each “entry” is fewer than 260 characters.
- Lore can be revealed in any order, and the lore itself is up for interpretation: while some details about the Cheeze Wizards world may be clear and agreed upon, some may be debatable or defined at a later time.
- This lore will influence or be featured as part of the game’s external messaging. It will communicate the personality of the brand and contextualize the world of Cheeze Wizards beyond gameplay. If appropriate, lore will be placed in external collateral—or tweaked to be appropriate.
- Otherwise, this content will be distributed via social channels and any “idle” moments (e.g. loading screens) within or adjacent to Cheeze Wizards.

Cheeze Wizards – General Lore

Cheeze Wizards don't die if they lose a duel—they get tired and go home. This is referred to as "going out to pasteurization".

Wizards may be powerful and immortal beings, but they are very petty.

In Cheeze Wizards, magic is power, power is ether, and being the Big Cheeze is everything.

In Cheeze Wizards, bigots are "lactose intolerant".

The Cheeze Wizards tournament is the only tournament in the universe where contenders must both bring a wand and arrive unarmed.

Once, in a tournament first, a greying Cheeze Wizard challenged a fiery demon to a duel on a bridge. It turns out that the only thing that's effective against Basic Wizards is a "towering, fire-breathing demon with whips and claws."

Also, gravity.

For all that is gouda in this world, do NOT touch a Wizard's holes without their consent.

The Cheeze Wizards tournament was conceived to settle online disagreements. The power of the inaugural tournament melted a nation, boiled the oceans, and took countless lives.

Overall, it was considered an improvement over arguing on social media.

Wizards are naturally argumentative.

Don't tell them that, though—they will disagree.

Cheeze Wizards are supposedly descended from dragon milk, but the only thing more absurd than a dragon with breasts is a race of sentient, magic-wielding cheese...

Cheeze Wizards hats are so large because that's where all their secrets live.

First, there was nothing. Then, there was milk. Then time passed.

Then there was Cheeze. And Wizards. CHEEZE WIZARDS!

When a Cheeze Wizard is summoned by a player, they enter into an ancient pact known as a "sponsorship contract." The wizard gets a chance to compete for glory and title, and the sponsoring player gets all their winnings for the rest of the wizard's unending life. Seems fair, right?

There are no magic bullets in Cheeze Wizards: just one magic bullet that was fired a century and continues to circle the world to this day in its never-ending quest for vengeance.

In Cheeze Wizards, all mushrooms are magic mushrooms. Buffets are terrifying existential experiences.

If a Cheeze Wizard gestures to their bedroom and says "this is where the magic happens," they are a fraud. It's unlikely that any bedroom could be appropriately zoned for magic, to say nothing of the necessary permits.

A Cheeze Wizard was once asked "what's the magic word?"

Their answer was 11-minutes long and did not contain a single syllable.

To Cheeze Wizards, the term "abra cadabra" has a lot of historical implications and should be avoided in polite company.

If your household has a wand in it, your more likely to use it on someone who lives there than an intruder. Statistically speaking, whoever you use the wand on will have it coming to them though.

Calling someone "A chip off the old block of cheddar" is one of the highest compliments a Cheeze Wizard can pay.

Provoking a Cheeze Wizard into an argument, known as "cheezing them off," happens approximately once every 0.32 seconds.

It's dangerous to go alone. Take cheeze.

"The best thing since sliced cheese" is a common expression in Cheeze Wizards.

The cheese wheel is one of the oldest known inventions in the world of Cheeze Wizards.

The most annoying Cheeze Wizards are the ones on social media that celebrate the daily rind.

Don't judge a Cheeze Wizard by their tough rind – most of them are soft and squishy on the inside. At least until they Ascend and harden up. Then judge. Intensely.

It's considered good manners to sniff a fellow Cheeze Wizard for ripeness.

Cheeze Wizards – Faction Lore

The Holy Cow

The Holy Cow is a divine bovine and “creator” of the Cheeze Wizards world.

The world of Cheeze Wizards balances on the four teats of the udder of a giant cow.
If that sounds udderly amazing, well...

The world of Cheeze Wizards balances on the four teats of the udder of a giant cow.
It's a common practice to follow up "Holy cow!" with "amen."

The world of Cheeze Wizards balances on the four teats attached to the udder of a giant cow.
When it gets cold out, entire nations can be upended.

The world of Cheeze Wizards balances on the four teats attached to the udder of a giant cow.
To a Cheeze Wizard, cow tipping is one of the most offensive forms of blasphemy there is.

The Grate Ones

Born from the Holy Cow's favoured nipples, the Grate Ones are supposed to be... well, great.

Born from the Holy Cow's favoured nipples, the Grate Ones actually started as Gouda Ones.
Over time, they matured though.

Born from the Holy Cow's favoured nipples, the Grate Ones depicted in classical art as totally shredded.

Of the Grate Ones borne from the Holy Cow's favoured nipples, only one remains living.
Religious scholars question what defines “life” for a god-like deity, but the conversation is usually derailed by the question of what defines life for cheese in the first place.

The Mold Gods

Born from the Holy Cow's lesser-known extra nipple, the Mold Gods are a primeval... well, evil.

The Mold God was borne from the Holy Cow's lesser-known extra nipple. Imagine child birth. Now imagine that you had a child that's hundreds of metres tall. Via your nipple. This is why the Mold Gods are considered evil—or at least inconsiderate.

Sorcerers

The Supreme [ID#1] “Sorcerer 0”

Borne from the source curd, capable of cosmic magics, and blessed with eternal youth, the Supreme Sorcerer's every word is gospel. It's also complete gibberish—newborns don't really benefit from eternal youth.

Randalf the Grate [ID#101] “Sorcerer 1” (Neutral)

Randalf once challenged a demon to a duel on the bridge to tournament tower. On that day, the world learned the only weakness for magic beings with a neutral affinity: a towering, fire-breathing demon with whips and claws. Also, gravity.

Wincerind [ID#102] “Sorcerer 2” (Wind)

The top student at the School of Spellcraft and Fizzelery, Wincerind is renowned for his ability to transfigure minor issues into major catastrophes. Mathemagicians describe Wincerind as “the magical equivalent of the number one,” which is a particularly magical, but lonely, number.

Morgan le Whey [ID#103] “Sorcerer 3” (Wind)

Morgan le Whey's reputation is mythical. In the mold tongue, Morgan is known as "Aaoograha goa" ("They Who Must Be Avoided"). In the grating dialect, she is "C'ez'rec d'b'duz" ("Go Around the Other Side of the Mountain"). Morgan also has a cat named Purrlin.

Doctor Normal [ID#104] “Sorcerer 4” (Water)

A Sorcerer turned surgeon, Doctor Normal doesn't actually have a medical degree—which makes sense, because Cheeze Wizards are immortal beings. When it comes down to it, Doctor Normal is more of a chef who attempts to shred cheese in a life-saving manner.

Barry Watter [ID#105] “Sorcerer 5” (Water)

Despite their fabled ability to talk to snakes (up to and including those mean girls in high school), Barry Watter could never score higher than C++ in Python-Charming class. Either they git it, or they don't. Some magic is very binary that way.

Jobe Ruth [ID#106] “Sorcerer 6” (Fire)

Jobe Ruth was once accused of keeping lighter fluid in their sleeves to enhance their fire spells. Jobe claimed how expensive their robes were as a defense (followed by “come on!”). The case was thrown out when they realized that nobody in the world of Cheeze Wizards has sleeves.

Rumblemore [ID#107] “Sorcerer 7” (Fire)

Controversies marred Rumblemore's tenure as the Principal at the School of Spellcraft and Fizzelery: favoritism for students that share his affinity, a LOT of deaths, and accusations he left at least one recently orphaned baby on a doorstep.

Mold Magicians

Mold Magicians often try to impress one another by tipping cows.

Mold Magicians refer to the primeval period where colossal entities known as the Mold Gods ruled the world as “the good mold times.”

Most Mold Magicians are nobles that live at the borders of various nations, making them both literal and metaphorical edge lords.

The Mold Magicians are a secret order that is never discussed aloud, which is why their social media presence is so important.

The Mold Magicians are a secret order. They primarily recruit new members by standing on sidewalks and asking for a moment of passerbyers' time, rendering them nigh invisible...

Mold Magicians live by a few rules:

1. Do not talk about being a Mold God follower
2. Do not talk about being a Mold God follower
3. Someone says “Stop!”, you do—we may be an evil order, but consent is important.

The Mold Magician's mission is to bring back the Mold Gods. Well, at least one Mold God to start—the Mold Magician's also believe in breaking up goals to make them more digestible and easier to achieve.

Mold Magicians are a/ways a little too moist, even by Water Wizard standards.

Mold Magicians pay exclusively in exposure, making them one of the most evil sects in the world of Cheeze Wizards.

If you think the Mold God is the right deity for you, but you're not sure yet, the Mold Magicians have an internship available—unpaid, of course.

The Mold Magician's have a pyramid-based hierarchy, but it is not a pyramid scheme! Mold Magicians are all considered equal sacrifices to the blue mold regardless of their rank.

Mold Magicians meet underground because one of their early founders was fairly literal minded about creating an underground movement.

Mold Magicians believe that, if they're all gathered in one place, a Mold God will appear. Due to scheduling conflicts, this belief has remained untested for over a thousand years.

A Mold Magician will conjure a tornado just to drop a house on a neighbor they don't like. And their little dog, too.

You can tell an Edge Lord by their Swisser handle--usually something like xXxMoldMagician420xXx.

How do you tell a Cheeze Wizard from a Mold Magician? There's no whey.

Some like it hot. Mold Magicians like it dark, damp, and musty.

Mold Magicians – Hierarchy/Rank Lore

Each hierarchy requires ~200 characters of singular lore that will accompany every Mold Magician at that rank.

Unlike Cheeze Wizards, which are summoned, Mold Magicians are recruited (i.e. they already exist, whereas Cheeze Wizards “come into being” when they're summoned).

1/1 Moldemort

Moldemort is the leader of the Mold Magicians. Rumoured to only appear when all Mold Magicians are assembled, Moldemort's mastery over 148 different calendars showcases his power over the dark arts and crafts.

178

7/7 Mold Master

Second only to the leader of the Mold Magicians, Mold Masters settle for pretty-close-to-grateness. Naturally, the seven of them do nothing but argue about who's really the closest—as is their way.

176

14/14 Mold Edgelord

A group of nobles living at national borders, these Mold Magicians are both literal and figurative Edgelords. They like to think they're the dark underbelly of Mold Magician society, but it's all a facade du fromage.

180

21/21 Mold Apprentice

Aspirations of glory and damp palms—the hallmarks of a Mold Apprentice. That, and how they always go on about finishing their final decompositions by the end of the semester.

178

28/28 Mold Fun Guys

Where there are Mold Fun Guys, there are magic mushrooms. Eating pizza with these dudes is an existential gamble. Luckily, the new recruits are forced to taste-test at parties.

177

35/35 Mold Groupie

The Mold Groupies got stories, man. Stories from the good mold days. They say they were there, right at the arena, when the Mold God shredded live. It was epic.

150

42/42 Mold Follower

A Mold Magician that grows on you. A little brother type. Always gets the broken controller. Just glad to be recruited, even if the initiation ritual is totally de-grating.

These will likely have a 200-character bio limit similar to the Mold Magicians and existing Cheeze Wizard collatreal for Elemental and Neutral wizards, e.g.

Mocked for being wishy-washy, Water Wizards can use all the elements, but their water spells are extra strong against fire and extra weak to wind. They are inexplicably moist all of the time.

The Seven Sorcerers are the only beings who can understand the Supreme Sorcerer—or so they claim.

The Mold God

Some say the Mold god can turn into a giant blue cheese-sea dragon. Others say that's just something the Mold god tells women at parties.

Exclusive Wizards – Foundational Guidelines

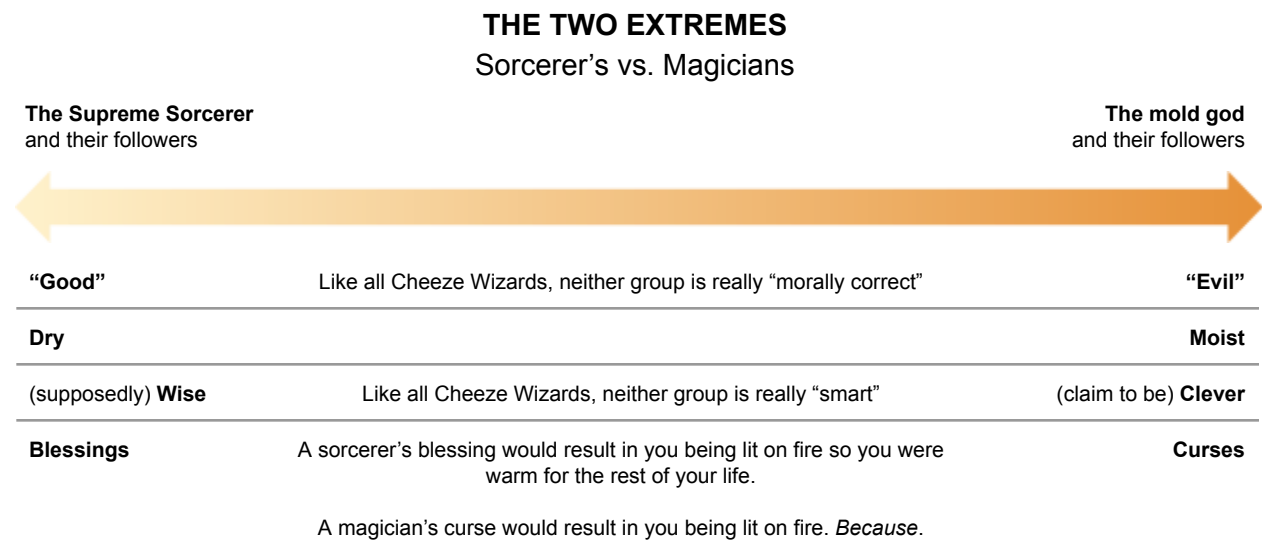

The following is the general guidelines and foundation for Exclusive Wizard lore. It is not intended as publicly-facing lore.

The Supreme Sorcerer is (supposedly) the most righteous and powerful Wizards in the world. The Seven Sorcerers are the Supreme Sorcerer's apostles. Their power comes from the primal magicks of the source curd.

The Founders were the first wizards summoned. They created the Cheeze Wizards tournament to avoid (or repeat, the texts are unclear) the mistakes (or successes, the history books have a lot of room for interpretation) of their ancestors.

The Mold Magicians, AKA the mold god's followers are a secret sect that worships and draws their power from the blue mold. If they are all gathered in one place, they believe the mold god will appear.

In the world of Cheeze Wizards, Sorcerers and Mold Magicians represent two extremes. Both are powerful, morally dubious, and udderly idiotic.

Long-term thinkers

A sorcerer would let a forest burn down because it will be a lush valley in a century.

Short-term thinkers

A mold magician would burn a forest down because they need a night light.
